

£4million to save Royal Botanic Garden Edinburgh's iconic glasshouses

12/04/2022

Frankie Toner, Policy and Public Affairs Manager at National Lottery Heritage Fund with Simon Milne MBE, Regius Keeper and Emma Lacroix, Director of Development at the Royal Botanic Garden Edinburgh. Credit: David Cheskin

The investment will also help to look after rare, extraordinary plants, encouraging visitors of all ages to care about the environment.

Our grant will restore two historic Victorian palm houses and a range of modernist 1960s glasshouses. It will also support the re-display of rare and endangered historic plant collections and help engage audiences through new interpretation and visitor activities.

Grand designs

The two Palm Houses are outstanding examples of Victorian engineering. The octagonal Tropical Palm House was constructed in 1834 but was soon considered too small. So in 1856 a new Temperate Palm House was built to a grand design by Scottish architect Robert Matheson.

Caroline Clark, Director for Scotland at The National Lottery Heritage Fund, said: "We are delighted to be supporting this important project, which will see the historic heart of the Royal Botanic Garden

Edinburgh restored and revitalised for the benefit of generations to come. Thanks to National Lottery players, this significant grant will rescue these iconic buildings... engaging wider and more diverse audiences both locally and internationally.”

People of all ages can enjoy the gardens. Credit: David Cheskin

Protecting fragile species

The project will also help look after some of the Garden's most spectacular plants which live in the glasshouses. These include the Amorphophallus titanum from Sumatra – known as the 'corpse flower' – which spectacularly flowers at night and smells of rotting meat.

The project will form the historic centrepiece of the wider Edinburgh Biomes experience and will ensure the safety of these globally significant living collections.

The Iconic Victorian Temperate Palm House. Credit: David Cheskin

Simon Milne, Regius Keeper, Royal Botanic Garden Edinburgh said: "The significance of this award of £4m cannot be underestimated and we are hugely grateful to National Lottery players for making it possible..."

"Now, we can reimagine our visitor experience. Visionary interpretation and activities will communicate the vulnerability of life on Earth."

He added: "By inspiring everyone to care about the environment and play their part, there is real opportunity to make tangible change."

Find out more

Discover more about some of the amazing buildings across the UK our investment has helped save.

You might also be interested in...

Architect drawings for the rebuilt Botanic Cottage

News

Edinburgh's Botanic Cottage reopens

The Botanic Cottage at the Royal Botanic Gardens Edinburgh (RBGE) has reopened 250 years after it was first completed - but in a different location!

11/05/2016

Mae Gardd Fotaneg Genedlaethol Cymru yn dathlu Dydd Gŷl Dewi mewn steil gyda-gwerth miliynau o bunnoedd buddsoddiad

News

Daffodils, dogs and St David: £6m to Wales' National Botanic Garden

Wales' National Botanic Garden celebrates the new season in style with £6million investment.
01/03/2017

Curvilinear glasshouse in Millichope Park

News

Ahead of the curve! Rare glasshouse to be restored

A very rare 19th-century curved glasshouse will once again be able to cultivate rare and exotic plants, and will be open to the public for the first time in many years, thanks to a grant of almost £66,000 from the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF).

11/12/2014