

Dr Fiona McLean

Role

Committee Member for Scotland

Dr Fiona McLean has had a lifelong passion for heritage in Scotland.

Fiona was formerly a Professor of Cultural Heritage Management at Glasgow Caledonian University, and was a board member of Historic Environment Scotland until 2023.

She has worked extensively with community groups in the Cairngorms National Park, supporting them in developing and achieving their heritage goals. As a non-executive director on the Cairngorms National Park Authority, Fiona champions local heritage and promotes the landscapes and nature of the park.

Fiona is committed to furthering the cause of equality, diversity and inclusion, and in both her academic research and in her capacity as a non-executive director, she has championed equality issues. Fiona has also worked with young people through the Feisean movement, giving opportunities to learn more about Gaelic language and heritage.

Fiona currently sits on the Judicial Appointments Board for Scotland. She is currently the Rector of the University of the Highlands and Islands, having previously been Vice Chair of the University of the Highlands and Islands Court.
