

We want to do more to eliminate racism and drive greater equality, diversity and inclusion in heritage

23/06/2020

Equality, diversity and inclusion

The National Lottery Heritage Fund is launching a wide-ranging review of its approach to diversity and inclusion.

Chief Executive, Ros Kerslake, said the powerful protests happening across the world, including the UK, calling for a re-examination and a redress of racial inequality has led her to reflect on The Fund's efforts and accelerate change.

"As the largest funder of the UK's heritage, are we doing enough to open up heritage to a wider range of people?"

Chief Executive, Ros Kerslake

The National Lottery Heritage Fund Chief Executive Ros Kerslake

“As the largest funder of the UK's heritage, are we doing enough to open up heritage to a wider range of people?”

"Inclusion has been a focus for the organisation for many years and in 2019 we adopted a mandatory inclusion outcome for our grants and an updated Workforce Equality Statement. These are steps in the right direction, but I believe that we need to do much more.”

Launching a taskforce

As part of the review, we will be consulting widely – both internally and externally – and will listen and act on what we learn.

Maria Adebawale-Schwarte

Maria Adebawale-Schwarte will chair a taskforce to oversee the review. Maria has been a trustee at The Fund since 2018. She brings 25 years of experience working across the heritage, environment and grant-making sectors, with a focus on inclusive place and urban renewal strategy.

Maria said: “Like Ros, I have been deeply affected by the events unfolding around the world following the death of George Floyd. It has given a lot of individuals and organisations pause for thought about whether they are part of the problem and more importantly, whether they want to be part of the solution.”

“I welcome The Fund’s decision to take decisive action to drive a greater integration of equality, diversity and inclusion, both within the organisation and as a funder.”

Maria Adebawale-Schwarte

“I welcome The Fund’s decision to implement this review and take decisive action to drive a greater integration of equality, diversity and inclusion, both within the organisation and as a funder.”

The taskforce will report to the Board of Trustees.

Creating a more equitable society

Ros said: “Heritage with inclusion at its heart is incredibly powerful in bringing people together and creating a more equitable society for all.”

“I am proud of the difference we’ve already been able to make – from investing £4m to establish the Black Cultural Archives, preserving stories from the Windrush generation and people's experiences of the decriminalisation of homosexuality in Northern Ireland, to funding heritage projects that help people overcome isolation and improve their mental health – but I am determined that we will do more.

“This review is a commitment to building an environment that is free from racism and inequality.”

You might also be interested in...

Stories

After Windrush - telling stories of struggle and celebration

Why did you want to make this film? I had the idea for about 25 years. I'm an African-Caribbean British Yorkshireman. I was born here, raised here. I saw my mother and father go through racism, I went through it at school. Then when I came out of the military, I couldn't even get a job, people were

Outside view of Black Cultural Archives building in Brixton

News

Black Cultural Archives opens to the public

The £7million building, with £4.5m from the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF), is located in the heart of Brixton in Windrush Square, providing access to a captivating collection of black, culturally important material and artefacts. This new and unique space, dedicated to black heritage in Britain, will

24/07/2014