

£43million awarded to help communities share skills and learn together

09/04/2025

The Tylorstown community celebrate outside the Welfare Hall. Credit: Steve Pope / FotoWales. From the Norfolk coast to the canals of Scotland, our latest batch of grants will provide opportunities for people to get hands on with heritage and connect with their area's past.

Heritage isn't just about things and places, it's about people. The people who care for, share and use heritage. Many of the 16 projects we've recently funded at our six March committee meetings – in an investment totalling £43.4m – are about boosting skills to care for heritage and bringing communities together to share and use it.

These activities will also help strengthen the resilience of local heritage organisations and broaden inclusion, access and participation – key principles of our Heritage 2033 strategy.

Hear from a selection of the successful projects across the UK about the difference our funding will make.

Lock 16: a centre of excellence for canals and traditional skills

Scottish Canals has received £3.7m to create a new skills centre on the banks of the Forth and Clyde Canal in Falkirk.

Stonemasons Jason Boag, Billy King and Ross Cowie, speaking to Caroline Clark, Director of Scotland at the National Lottery Heritage Fund. Credit: Kirsty Anderson.

Supervisor Billy King, who worked on the Union Canal for more than 26 years as a specialist in stonemasonry, said: “Over the years I’ve carried out emergency works to historic bridges, locks and chambers. There is a real lack of these traditional skills now; over the years, I have seen the decrease first hand. I am hopeful that Lock 16 will help bring a lot of these skills back. I would encourage anyone thinking about training in these skills to give it a go.”

Find out more about Lock 16.

Saving the Iron Duke

Our £2.4m grant will help the Great Yarmouth Preservation Trust resurrect one of the town’s most storied pubs, involving the community along the way.

The Iron Duke, before restoration begins. Credit: Great Yarmouth Preservation Trust.

The Trust's Darren Barker MBE said: "Throughout the restoration, there will be a host of events and workshops providing training, volunteering and engagement opportunities for hundreds of people. These will include traditional crafts, food heritage, photography, surveying, historic research and art. The restoration of the Iron Duke has had overwhelming support from the local community and we are so grateful for all the help."

Find out more about the Iron Duke.

Restoring Tylorstown Welfare Hall

The last remaining miners' welfare hall in Rhondda Cynon Taff, built in 1933, will continue to serve its community thanks to our £4.7m grant.

Tylorstown Welfare Hall sits at the heart of the community. Credit: Steve Pope / FotoWales.

Project manager Rebecca Elizabeth Sullivan said: “The Welfare Hall is deeply rooted in our community’s heritage, representing resilience, solidarity and hope. Our goal is to carry out essential renovations that will not only restore its architectural beauty but also expand the hall’s role as a community hub, offering vital services, activities and resources for people of all ages and backgrounds. We want everyone to feel welcome.”

Find out more about Tylorstown Welfare Hall.

Bringing people together at Ashburton Park

Croydon’s 100-year-old Ashburton Park has received £1.6m to restore facilities, support activities at a new Oasis Youth Hub and run local history and environmental projects with the community.

Autumn colours in Ashburton Park. Credit: London Borough of Croydon.

Andy Gill, Oasis Youth and Innovation Lead, said: “This investment is a demonstration of how working with local people can bring about lasting change, improving the life chances of our young people at a time when support is most needed.”

Got an idea for a project in your community?

Explore the difference we want our investment to make for heritage and what we can fund.

The Iron Duke before restoration. Credit: Great Yarmouth Preservation Trust.

Left to right: stonemasons Jason Boag, Billy King and Ross Cowie, speaking to Caroline Clark, Director of Scotland at the National Lottery Heritage Fund. Credit: Kirsty Anderson.

e for canals and traditional skills

Tylorstown Welfare Hall sits at the heart of the local community. Credit: Steve Pope / FotoWales

A fresh start for Tylorstown Welfare Hall