Six areas, towns and cities across the UK to benefit from long-term investment

15/10/2025

Hundreds of people are gathered, enjoying the sunshine, around a historic ship in dry dock on the Belfast quayside. Celebrating the Belfast Maritime Festival on the banks of the River Lagan. Photo: Maritime Belfast Trust. We're delighted to announce funding for these new Heritage Places, the next chapter of a 10-year journey to help places thrive by connecting communities to the heritage on their doorstep.

The new locations join the nine Heritage Places announced in October 2023. Together, they will share in a £200million investment aimed at unlocking the potential of heritage to boost local economies and pride in place.

Thanks to National Lottery players, our funding will create opportunities for people locally to develop bold ideas, learn heritage skills and create employment.

Eilish McGuiness, Chief Executive, The National Lottery Heritage Fund

Two visitors listentova tour guide explain the history of a ring of standing stones. A guided walk at the Ring of Brodgar, part of a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Photo: Orkney.com.

The six new Heritage Places are:

Barking and Dagenham, London

One of the capital's fastest-evolving boroughs – young, diverse and rich in history, ranging from Barking Abbey (founded 666AD) and its proud industrial roots, to its connection to pioneering women's rights advocates Mary Wollstonecraft and suffragette Annie Huggett.

Belfast Historic Waterfront, Northern Ireland

A working port for over 300 years, Belfast was once home to the world's largest shipyard. Today, the waterfront along the River Lagan is home to vibrant neighbourhoods filled with heritage and nature, as well as opportunities for regeneration.

Dudley, West Midlands

Nestled in the heart of the Black Country, the borough blends rich industrial heritage with nature reserves and geological wonders.

Orkney Islands, Scotland

An archipelago of over 70 islands with a vibrant community spirit and a cultural legacy spanning 5,000 years, from Mesolithic settlements to Viking strongholds.

Tameside, Greater Manchester

Made up of nine distinct districts, it's home to cultural gems such as the Portland Basin Museum, Astley Cheetham Art Gallery and the Museum of the Manchester Regiment, alongside historic churches and industrial heritage.

Ynys Môn (Isle of Anglesey), North Wales

An island where dramatic coastlines, rich heritage and natural beauty collide. From the elegant gardens of Plas Newydd to the golden sands of Red Wharf Bay, it's a haven for heritage and history.

Antarge red book, open to a page depicting a painting of a historic Barking and Dagenham pub, captured in the Delving into the archives to explore the social history of Barking and Dagenham. Photo: Grainge Photography.

Delivering our Heritage 2033 strategy

Today's announcement of six new Heritage Places is the latest step in the delivery of our?Heritage 2033 strategy, and contributes to our vision for heritage to be valued, cared for and sustained for everyone, now and in the future.

Each location has been chosen through an evidence-based approach which combines? new quantitative research? with local insight to identify places with heritage needs, opportunities and potential.

The thirteenth century keep of Dudley Castle, flying a cross of St. George, rises above the skyline of the town. Dudley Castle, a focus of conflict, industry and entertainment through different eras of history. Photo: Dudley Council.

To date, we've invested more than £4m in Heritage Places across the UK, from Castell-nedd Port Talbot (Neath Port Talbot)?to North-East Lincolnshire.

Sparking imagination, offering inspiration

Eilish McGuiness, Chief Executive of The National Lottery Heritage Fund, said: "Heritage Places is about celebrating a diversity of heritage – sparking imagination, offering inspiration and helping communities to thrive by linking the past with their future.

"Our commitment is to embed heritage into local strategies, strengthen community connections and support long-term ambitions – creating opportunities for people locally to develop bold ideas, learn heritage skills and create employment."

Heritage Minister Baroness Twycross said: "Every corner of the UK has a rich heritage, and deserves the opportunity to celebrate and showcase it. This major investment of National Lottery funding is a fantastic opportunity to promote local growth within the visitor economy and for communities to be championed within our shared national story."

A thriving future, built around heritage

Anglesey Council Leader, Councillor Gary Pritchard, welcomed the announcement:?"This is an exciting opportunity for Ynys Môn. We're proud that the island has received national recognition and grateful to the Heritage Fund for its funding commitment.

Assone white lighthouse sits atop a stack of rock on the craggy shoreline of Ynys Mon, looking out over the Market T?r Mawr Lighthouse, built in 1845, on the shores of Ynys Môn.

"Our aim now is to expand the island's rich heritage offer, ensuring that it can make a significant contribution to local communities and the socio-economic future of Ynys Môn. We are eager to work with partners, local stakeholders, community and interest groups to achieve this."

Supporting new opportunities and pride in place

Heritage Places is just one of the ways we can support the regeneration, resilience and relevance of heritage across the UK.

If you're considering a heritage-led project to transform a place like a high street, historic quarter or natural landscape, you can apply for up to £10m through our National Lottery Grants for Heritage. Explore our funding.

You might also be interested in...

A mock directional sign pointing to the nine Heritage Places

Data for Heritage Places – a new analysis using the Heritage Index

Heritage Places: year 1 evaluation report

Forquay on the South Devon coast, with Torre Abbey in the foreground. Torquay on the South Devon coast, with Torre Abbey in the foreground.

£200million funding for Heritage Places will boost local economies and pride in place