

Changing lives: Danielle ploughs a straight furrow to her ideal career

Thanks to a National Lottery-supported apprenticeship in heritage farming, 24-year-old Danielle Chatten has found focus and a future.

“It takes a level of willpower to command a large Suffolk Punch to stay in a straight line,” says Danielle Chatten.

Handling heavy horses that can weigh over 2,000 pounds and stand 17 hands - or six feet - tall is just one of many skills that Danielle, 24, has been able to add to her CV thanks to a heritage farming course at Gressenhall Farm and Workhouse, run by Norfolk Museums Service.

“After having completed three years of academic study at Lincoln University it was very refreshing to be able to get more hands on.”

Growing up in a village not far from Gressenhall, Danielle had visited the farm many times as a child, and has always loved history and horses. When the chance to apply for an apprenticeship there came up, thanks to an HLF Skills for the Future project, it was, she says, “a no-brainer!”.

“After having completed three years of academic study at Lincoln University it was very refreshing to be able to get more hands on,” she recalls.

And get ‘hands on’ she certainly did. In the course of her apprenticeship at Gressenhall, Danielle qualified to drive a tractor, completed courses in brushcutting, winter tree pruning, hedge laying, scything and lambing, studied veterinary medicine on horses, sheep and goats and achieved a British Driving Society Harness Horse Grooms Level 2 diploma. She also passed a Level 3 diploma in environmental conservation.

She remembers fondly a whole range of experiences. “There was one day in the summer after my colleagues and I had scythed a wildflower meadow and allowed the hay to dry,” she recalls. “I harnessed up one of our Suffolks to our hay wagon and led him to the meadow. We loaded the hay wagon up as it was done years ago, transported the hay and created a hay stack. That hay was then fed to a small herd of cows. The sense of achievement of having been part of such an integral process was fantastic.”

A new career path

Before the training course Danielle feels she lacked the focus necessary to land a full-time job. Now all that has changed. “The traineeship made me stronger, both physically and mentally,” she says. “I made a lot of friends and also contacts in my role which has allowed me to progress further with my career.”

That career choice is taking what she has learned about farming, animal husbandry and conservation and using it to enthuse the next generation. She now works for Easton & Otley agricultural college as an engagement co-ordinator for schools. “I travel around Norfolk educating high school students about the land-based industries and the amount of exciting opportunities that are open for them,” she says.

“It’s a very satisfying role, particularly when you see that you have opened someone’s mind to a totally new career path.” She adds: “Without Gressenhall, and the National Lottery, I wouldn’t have had the knowledge to be able confidently to talk about the industry, nor the self-confidence to even want to!”
