

An historic postcard of Truro City Hall on Boscawen Street Azook CIC, 2017

Truro's City Hall, home to Cornwall's largest theatre, receives £2.5million National Lottery boost.

The National Lottery-funded project will conserve and redevelop Truro's City Hall building, home to Hall For Cornwall, the county's largest theatre.

The Grade II listed building was constructed in 1846, but the site has been a part of civic life in Truro for 350 years, as a market place, a court, a fire station, and much more. A community campaign nearly 30 years ago saw it reopen as a theatre hosting shows from musicians and dancers to Christmas pantos.

The Revealing City Hall: One Building, 1265 Voices project will see this community building repaired and reinvigorated alongside an exciting and participative activity programme, which will bring the site's rich community heritage to life through workshops, events, training and volunteer placement opportunities.

Julien Boast, Director of Hall for Cornwall said: "Over the years, Truro City Hall has been many things to many people. Courts of Justice, skating rink, food market, rifle range, jail, theatre and seat of political power. It has survived fire and more than one economic downturn, provided a platform for civic unrest and played host to award-winning shows.

"The National Lottery-funded project will enable people to discover the evolving heritage of City Hall and its place in an emerging city, through a 'voice-scape' of people past and present and a host of other creative innovations that will tell its very unique story."

Ros Kerslake, Chief Executive of HLF, said: “Thanks to National Lottery players, Hall For Cornwall’s rich 350-year history will be revealed in an enhanced public building. We are particularly excited about the number of people, young and old, who will be involved in the building’s future through education and training programmes, volunteering opportunities and activities connected to their local heritage.”

At 27 metres tall, the Treffry Viaduct is an amazing feat of engineering Ainsley Cocks

conomy and create jobs

The cast of Cinderella having a ball Tim Morozzo

Curtain’s up on a bright future at ‘The Citz’

500 years of history saved for Cornwall