

£1.6million to transform historic Magna Carta site at Runnymede

20/07/2018

The River Thames at Runnymede National Trust/John Millar
National Lottery funding will help unify the two sites of Runnymede and Ankerwycke.

It is 803 years since feudal barons forced King John to seal Magna Carta at Runnymede, on the banks of the Thames, near Windsor. To this day, Magna Carta remains one of the most important documents in global history.

Now the National Trust can move ahead with plans to help visitors discover more about this special place and enjoy it for recreation, learning and volunteering.

International significance

Funding of £1.6million from the National Lottery will help to unify two sites of international significance, Runnymede and adjacent Ankerwycke, with improved pathways and interpretation, and a new ferry crossing across the River Thames. The project will enable visitors to travel more easily between the two sites and get a better understanding of their combined importance: Runnymede's significance as the site of the sealing of Magna Carta, and Ankerwycke, home to Benedictine priory ruins and the Ankerwycke yew, the National Trust's oldest tree at 2,500 years old.

Plans also include new trails and an upgraded tow path along the River Thames to encourage access to the public artworks at the site: The Jurors, created by Hew Locke and Writ in Water created by Mark Wallinger, the monuments and memorials at Runnymede and to new interpretation around the themes of liberty, people and commemoration.

Special place

Ros Kerslake, Chief Executive of HLF, said: “There are few places in the UK that rival Runnymede in terms of its profound influence on our national heritage. Thanks to funding from the National Lottery, these thoughtful and sensitive improvements will enhance this special place for everyone to enjoy.”

You might also be interested in...

Carole Souter, Chief Executive of the Heritage Lottery Fund

Blogs

How Magna Carta still inspires us, 800 years on

As the country marks 800 years to the day since the sealing of Magna Carta at Runnymede, our Chief Executive Carole Souter reflects on how the anniversary has proven to be a "smash hit" with HLF-funded projects.

15/06/2015

Magna Carta on display at Salisbury Cathedral

News

Election Day 2015

As the nation goes to the polls to elect the UK's 56th Parliament, we look at how the National Lottery is helping people explore the history and heritage of our political systems, parliament buildings and elections.

07/05/2015