Jamal!

How are you doing man?

Good to see you!

So look we've got a posh bug hotel here and the reason that we make these – if you've got a relatively new garden without mature material – if you make one of these you can still cater for all those animals that need that as a resource. Let's get stuck in!

So Jamal do you have a passion for wildlife at all?

I have a little bit of a passion and when I got my camera for Christmas I actually went out in my garden and started filming the ants the bugs the foxes.... But I didn't really embrace it enough but being here this morning and coming out and seeing how easy it is to make a bug hotel and little bits that I can add to preserve wildlife in my area, I don't see why I can't do it.

And the RSPB, the Woodland Trust and The Wildlife Trusts have come together with 10 top tips that people can do literally in the comfort of their own space.

Now we're in the Woodberry Wetlands, can you tell me a little bit more about this place please?

Yeah I mean it's been here for a long time as a reservoir but it's been more recently used as a wildlife resource, and a place where all these people living around here can come and experience nature. And I've got to say it's all thanks to the London Wildlife Trust and the Lottery funding that it's got. And over the last 25 years, £40 billion has been raised by the Lottery for good causes, and I'm really pleased to say more than £850 million has gone to helping biodiversity; richness of life in the UK, £900 million to parks – improving there, so green spaces have really prospered because of that Lottery grant system.

I never actually knew you could buy a ticket and the money would go to conserving a local park.

No – I know!

Thank you for spending the time with me this morning.

No not at all I've really enjoyed it and now you know how to make a bug hotel!

See your one came out, that's not a full one – see! Look at that my one's not come out...

THANK YOU!
